These agencies play an important role in supporting country governments to develop and implement policies to reduce inequality and stimulate development.

Equality is our goal, access is our right

A bus to get to work. A clinic for health care. A monthly pension for old age. Some people can take these for granted. But many others suffer from deficits in infrastructure, public services and social protection that undercut their rights and well-being. Women and girls are often foremost among those who miss out.

Progress in our world will only be possible if women and girls realize equal rights and opportunities to thrive. Globally agreed agendas for development call for closing the gaps. Meeting that goal requires recognizing that women and girls face particular barriers and have different needs. And then taking deliberate steps so that no woman or girl is left behind, regardless of where she lives or comes from.

Healthy, educated women who can safely and easily go to work, get their goods to market, light their homes, know that their children are well cared for and look forward to a decent retirement. These are among the fundamentals. Right now, equality is incomplete. But as this exhibit sponsored by UN Women shows, even as women and girls are still doing their best to cope with disparities, change is undeniably on the way. UN Women’s work to advance women’s and girls’ rights around the world would not be possible without the financial support of more than 170 partners including Governments, United Nations agencies, private sector corporations, foundations and individuals, amongst others.
MILLION GIRLS AT RISK

FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION

The 68 Million exhibition is designed to encourage global community members to celebrate the successes that have been achieved over the past decades in the urgent global effort to eliminate female genital mutilation (FGM). The young women featured in this photography represent a new generation of leaders. Each one of them was born into a community that has traditionally practised FGM, and yet, after becoming educated about the risks of this harmful practice, they have become champions to end it.

JOIN THESE CHAMPIONS AND PLEDGE YOUR COMMITMENT TODAY TO ENSURE THAT 68 MILLION GIRLS ARE FREE FROM FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION.
