GWI reflects on 25 years of progress for girls on International Day of the Girl, 11 October

Since 2011, 11 October is marked as the International Day of the Girl, that draws global attention to the unique challenges girls face around the world, whilst promoting girls’ empowerment and rights. This year’s theme “GirlForce: Unscripted and Unstoppable” marks 25 years of progress for girls since the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform of Action, which constitutes the most progressive blueprint for advancing the rights of girls. Simultaneously, the Convention on the Rights of the Child turns 30 this year. Following this year’s theme, GWI stands with girls to develop their skills now and reach their full potential through education at the highest level. As an organisation committed to improving the education space for girls, GWI aims through its programmes, such as the Bina Roy Partners in Development, to provide girls and women with opportunities for training and skills development, thus helping them to develop the foundational, transferable and job-specific skills they need to thrive as individuals and professionals. Ahead of this very important day, GWI invites you to read and share its press release that reflects on 25 years of progress for girls. On 9 October GWI will launch a social media campaign specific to the International Day of the Girl. Follow us on Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and LinkedIn to participate. Please check the GWI website for the soon-to-be-released IDOG toolkit.

On 24 September, GWI’s Egyptian Association of Graduate Women (EAGW) member, Magda Omar and GWI Independent Member, Sahar Gamal, participated in the Bibliotheca Alexandrina’s BAIFA conference on “Africa Talks Education: For a Better Tomorrow”. GWI praises young female teachers on World Teacher’s Day, 5 October Marked annually on 5 October since 1994, World Teacher’s Day commemorates the efforts made by teachers worldwide to progress education for women and girls. This year’s theme “Young Teachers: The future of the Profession” resonates with GWI’s Teachers for Rural Futures Programme in which GWI supports young women in obtaining a university degree in education and to return to their rural communities and become teachers and role models for other young girls’ education. To read the full press release, please click here. Likewise, please follow, like and share GWI’s social media campaign on Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn for the day starting on 3 October.

GWI celebrates the limitless potential of rural women and girls Celebrated annually on 15 October, International Day of Rural Women aims to strengthen rural women and girls’ voices. This year’s theme “Rural women and girls building climate resilience” reminds us how central rural women are to developing a sustainable future. When these women are empowered, families, communities and countries benefit economically. GWI will advocate throughout a social media campaign for rural women and girls to be considered in decision-making processes and for their needs to be listened to because they will by key to the future of all our livelihoods. This year, to mark critical areas of concern for rural women, GWI is producing a comprehensive toolkit for release in the coming days. Please look out for this on the GWI website’s advocacy page.

GWI attends Monica McWilliams’ talk on education, peace and conflict resolution

On 27 September, GWI Intern, Ciara Rainsby, attended a speaker event at the La Châtaigneraie campus of the International School of Geneva, Switzerland. The invited speaker was Monica McWilliams, Northern Irish peace activist and human rights defender. McWilliams is known for her participation in the multi-party talks of the Northern Irish peace process that established the 1998 Good Friday Agreement that, of its many attributes, addressed integrated education.

During her talk, McWilliams focused on the role that education plays in conflict resolution saying that education is a critical element that should always be on the peace table. She emphasised that education enables people to learn from different experiences. In addition, she highlighted her work with women in conflict regions that aims to empowers them pointing out the fact that many groups have consistently been missing from peace negotiations, such as women and children as she witnessed during the peace talks in Northern Ireland. In effect, she believes that achieving and sustaining peace is achieved through a participatory process that involves such groups. Today, her work has expanded into research on domestic violence at the Ulster University in Northern Ireland.

On their return to the workplace, Australia Awards Alumni are expected to contribute actively to development in their home countries. The Scholarship is offered annually and the deadline for the scholarship is December and March of the academic year. For further information about requirements and the application process, please click here.

At the event, representatives from member states, international organisations and civil society discussed policies and laws aimed to meet the needs of women and girls within the family context. Panellists examined key issues such as family laws, employment, unpaid care work, violence against women, and families and migration.

Families around the world live differently in today’s global world. Families are a critical juncture that can profoundly influence women and girls achieving their rights. Families can be places of love, nurture and accomplishment but, unfortunately, too often they are also spaces where women’s and girls’ rights are violated, their voices left unheard and where gender inequality prevails.

— Give the gift of education —

GWI is directly addressing the lack of women teachers as a barrier to girls’ secondary education by sponsoring girls from rural areas in Uganda to qualify as teachers through the Teachers for Rural Futures project. An increase in qualified women teachers in rural Uganda will have a huge impact on girls' education in the country. Educated girls and women are better equipped to participate effectively in society, to protect themselves from harm and to care for their children. Children of educated women are healthier and far more likely to go to school, creating long-term positive effects for generations. We invite you to contribute to our GlobalGiving campaign that enables young women to achieve their potential, inspire girls to go to school and build more prosperous communities. Give today.
